Introduction

As a result of a strategic planning initiative, (SAMPLE COMPANY) committed to assessing the employee morale and engagement and to take action to address concerns. To that end, YOUR CEO contacted Atlantic Consultants to create an assessment. The results are within this report. The timeframe was Q1, 2008.

A total of 28 employees responded to the survey, and 6 of these respondents are managers. The majority of the respondents (15) have been employed at (SAMPLE COMPANY) for 5 years or less, while 10 employees have been employed for a period of 6 to 10 years. There were 3 other respondents who have worked with the company for at least 11 years. The results of the survey are divided into three areas: company strengths, areas for improvement, and areas of critical concern.

The Strengths of the company are identified quantitatively by survey questions that resulted in a score of 4.0 or higher (on a scale of 1.0-5.0) as well as qualitative questions around strengths or what people would never change and adjectives that connote positive response. These results show which areas the company is succeeding in most.

The Opportunities for Improvement, are identified quantitatively by a score of 3.1-3.9. These are areas that should be leveraged. Attention to these areas of opportunity will certainly develop more strength for the company in the future.

Areas of Critical Concern identified with a score of 3.0 or below as well as qualitative answers on weaknesses, what they would change and adjectives that connote a negative response. This area indicates issues which can be considered to be a “red flag” for management. These concerns should be addressed immediately to prevent major erosion within the company.

As further requested, results have been organized and presented in a manner which allows for comparison and analysis of responses from both managers and employees. The first set of quantitative results for each question includes the responses from both the managers and the employees, and they are then ranked by the weighted average of these two figures (pages 5-8). It is necessary to take a weighted average in order to show the correct proportion of input from each party as 77.77% of respondents are employees and 22.22% are managers. Here is an example of how the weighted average was calculated:

Question #	Managers	Employees	Average (weighted)
23 Our company's products and services are top quality.	3.5	3.8	3.7
	3.5(22.22%) + 3.8(77.78%) = 3.7

Introduction (cont'd)

The second set of quantitative results is ranked by the amount of discrepancy between manager and employee responses (pages 9-11). This is calculated simply by taking the absolute value of the difference between the scores for each group.

Qualitative results (12) are first shown in the report by comparing the perception of managers and employees with regards to the company atmosphere and attitude, which is followed by additional qualitative insight for employees (13) and managers (15) individually. We then offer our summary (17) and recommendations (19) as well as an action planner (21).

As a background to this report we present 2 slides which are part of a larger workshop we do, called the “EFACTOR- Creating a culture of Employee Engagement.” Each chart pinpoints what they consider to be critical factors in engagement. While there are many similarities, we think the differences in terms of “Bread and Butter” and quality of life issues are worth noting.

Quantitative Results – Averages

(SAMPLE COMPANY) Employee Assessment

STRENGTHS – score of 4.0 or above

The following are the areas of strength as determined by the employee survey results. Manager and other employee results are separated to show how each group responded to a particular question. A weighted average of the two values is taken so that the employee score represents 77.78% of the final average (21 employees out of 27 responders), and the manager score represents 22.22% of the final average (6 managers out of 27 responders). A strength is identified as having an average (weighted) score of 4.0 or above.

Question #		MANAGER	EMPLOYEE	Average (weighted)
32	This company cares about my safety.	4.5	4.5	4.5
18	I like and respect my co workers.	4.3	4.4	4.4
11	I understand the vision and values of the company.	4.7	4.0	4.2
27	I trust and respect most of my co-workers.	3.7	4.1	4.0
5	I am proud to be an employee of (SAMPLE COMPANY).	4.3	3.9	4.0
29	I know my contribution makes a difference.	4.2	3.9	4.0

Summary:

This shows that the strengths touch many factors of engagement and job satisfaction (see page 4), safety, overall contribution, trust, respect and caring for co-workers, values and vision clarity, and pride. This shows strength in leadership and corporate culture.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR IMPROVEMENT – score of 3.1-3.9

The following are the opportunities for improvement as determined by the employee survey results. Manager and other employee results are separated to show how each group responded to a particular question. A weighted average of the two values is taken so that the employee score represents 77.78% of the final average (21 employees out of 27 responders), and the manager score represents 22.22% of the final average (6 managers out of 27 responders). An opportunity for improvement is identified as having an average (weighted) score of 3.1-3.9.

14	There is good communication between my direct supervisor/manager and me.	4.0	3.3	3.5
24	Our company provides the support I need to do my job effectively and efficiently.	4.0	3.3	3.5
28	My ideas are welcomed and acknowledged	3.5	3.4	3.4
25	Our company provides recognition for jobs well done.	4.0	3.2	3.4
35	Conflicts are addressed and resolved without impacting productivity.	3.5	3.3	3.3
20	Policies and procedures are clear.	3.5	3.2	3.3
30	Our company works well together as a team.	3.0	3.3	3.2
34	This company has adequate compensation.	3.8	3.0	3.2

Summary:

In this area, issues begin to emerge about disgruntlements in many areas: communication including listening; motivating behaviors like recognition; and bread and butter, quality of life issues like compensation. These are issues that both managers and leaders could address and improve.

AREAS OF CRITICAL CONCERN – score of 3.0 or below

The following are areas of critical concern as determined by the employee survey results. Manager and other employee results are separated to show how each group responded to a particular question. A weighted average of the two values is taken so that the employee score represents 77.78% of the final average (21 employees out of 27 responders), and the manager score represents 22.22% of the final average (6 managers out of 27 responders). An area of critical concern is identified as having an average (weighted) score of 3.0 or below.

Question #		MANAGER	EMPLOYEE	Average (weighted)
15	I am satisfied with how the company listens to and acts on my concerns.	3.5	2.9	3.0
31	Our company provides adequate mentoring, coaching and training.	3.5	2.8	3.0
21	Policies and procedures are enforced.	2.8	3.0	3.0
8	The communication in our company is clear.	3.5	2.6	2.8
26	Our company provides opportunity for career advancement.	2.7	2.5	2.5
7	I am not concerned about the upcoming changes.	1.5	2.4	2.2

Summary:

Here we see the impact of issues that have gone unaddressed. Particularly there is dissatisfaction around company-wide communication, self improvement, having openness to listen and respond to concerns and change, as well as accountability and fairness when policies are not consistently enforced. If people feel it is too difficult to communicate (8, 15,7) and that the company is not committed to improving an employee's capability and therefore future compensation (26, 31) and accountability is inconsistent (21) the work environment is at risk incubating future disengagement.

Quantitative Results – Discrepancies

(SAMPLE COMPANY) Employee Assessment

The following breakdown of the survey results shows the discrepancy in scores between managers and employers. The third column shows the amount of discrepancy between the two groups. Discrepancies are listed in descending order. A higher discrepancy indicates a greater gap between manager and employee perception for that particular question topic. Yellow highlighted designates where managers rated lower than the employees Green highlight designates where employees rated lower than managers

Report Summary

The completion of this survey by 28 employees of (SAMPLE COMPANY) yielded results that have been separated into strengths, areas of critical concern, and opportunities for improvement,

Strengths

(SAMPLE COMPANY) strengths touch many factors of engagement and job satisfaction (see page 4), safety, overall contribution, trust, respect and caring for co-workers, values and vision clarity, and pride. This shows strength in leadership and corporate culture. This is an excellent beginning as it shows the breadth of the strength. That breadth creates “mojo” as well as Velcro for the people. People want to see the company grow.

The 6 greatest strengths include feeling like the company cares about their safety, they like, trust and respect their coworkers, they know they make a difference, they understand the vision and values of the company and they are proud to be an employee of (SAMPLE COMPANY). People at (SAMPLE COMPANY) are looking forward to continued growth and want to maintain the family values and people that connect them to the enterprise. These are all key issues in engagement and employee satisfaction. These are also building blocks for converting weaknesses and opportunities to improve. For example, if people already feel positive about the people that can help people stay connected while (SAMPLE COMPANY) improves some other areas like communication and management effectiveness.

This “mojo” is further supported by the words most people use to comment about the atmosphere and attitudes including; “friendly,” “supportive”, “appreciative,” “cooperative”, “respectful,” “hopeful,” and “positive.” It is worth noting, however that these words are felt much more strongly by the management than other employees. This might be further explored in some follow up work.

Areas of Critical Concern

The themes here seem to focus on overall communication, frustration at not being able to have more opportunities for professional development and the impact of managers and supervisors who may not effectively respond to concerns, connect with some of their employee issues, be consistent in policy enforcement and create an atmosphere that does not always feel open, flexible or caring.. If people feel it is too difficult to communicate (questions 8, 15,7) and that the company is not committed to improving an employee’s development (questions 26, 31) and accountability is inconsistent (quesetion21),the work environment is at risk incubating future disengagement.

11 River Street, Wellesley, MA 02481
www.atlanticconsultants.com

(Phone) 781-235-7555 info@atlanticconsultants.com (Fax) 781-772-2266

These themes are opportunities for leaders to create greater avenues for communication and for managers to listen better and find ways to help employees improve and advance professionally. This may help people feel their supervisors or managers are more responsive to some of the stress (hours comes up a great deal).

Many are looking to improve themselves and wish for more training, mentoring, coaching, and support and career advancement. Likewise there is concern about overall policy, procedure, accountability. If policies are randomly followed through there is often a resentment that emerges where people feel they are not treated fairly.

While the 6 greatest areas of greatest concern include communication (including listening to concerns), opportunity for professional development and advancement, policy and procedure enforcement and the upcoming changes there are also qualitative remarks that broaden the picture.

When you look at some of the qualitative comments around atmosphere as “stressful,” “chaotic”, “demanding” it is not at all confusing that one-third feel “apprehensive.” It is also of concern that only 11% feel (SAMPLE COMPANY) is “motivating.”

Managers seem concerned about growth, meeting goals, and accountability and employee satisfaction. Employees are more concerned about the time flexibility, company growth and employee growth in training and support and communication.

While (SAMPLE COMPANY) is a “friendly: and “challenging” place to work, it is not perceived as “caring, “flexible” or “open.” this can be directly connected to the both communication and the management issues. Communication issues, however, seem to have the highest concern both quantitatively and qualitatively include listening as well as clarifying, motivating, and inspiring buy-in to the changes. While many companies complain about communication, in our experience it is a lightning rod for disengagement and often the tip of the iceberg for root cause issues. It is also of note that the greatest discrepancies in perception is around communication and concern around changes. Keep in mind communication is not just what is said, it is what is not said or heard, or acknowledged or avoided. These are great opportunities for leadership and management. Strategies should be galvanized to address these concerns. Left unattended, they can impact productivity, quality and profits. If progress is made towards seizing these opportunities, the company will find itself with many more strengths contributing to its success.

Much of that speaks to opportunities for leadership to improve their message and responsiveness. Since there is a noticeable amount of discrepancies around employee and management perceptions we would like to caution that management may not be as aware of the concerns as employees might like. That can lead to a tendency to underestimate the employee concerns or hopes.

Opportunities to Strengthen and Improve

This area is the wake up call. While not glowing accolades or growling complaints it is often the tip of the iceberg that can give you a heads up. Here issues begin to emerge about disgruntlements in many areas: communication including listening; motivating behaviors like recognition; and bread and butter, quality of life issues like compensation. These are issues that both managers and leaders could address and improve.

While not glaring and certainly holding the majority of responses, some of these issues could be easily addressed and corrected. There is again a dotted line between managers being more effective in their communication, expectations follow through and teambuilding and employees feeling like the supervisors care, and that, then can create greater trust in their supervisors. That may even increase employees feeling more motivated, supported and cared for. Only 11% describe the atmosphere as motivating

It is worthwhile to look at some of the discrepancies in perceptions between managers and employees. It would also be valuable to look at what are the highest scoring areas (like adequate benefits, customer concerns) and therefore could more easily be converted to strengths. As well it is helpful to look at areas that are closest to scores for critical concerns (compensation, teamwork) as they could convert to a weakness if not addressed.

Leaders have created the right culture that “velcroes” people to YOUR COMPANY. However, they need to address some of the management concerns as well as the employee concerns with management to retain both levels of employees and be competitive in the market.

We suggest the following recommendations:

Overall:
